Stephanie Salmon is president of Potomac Government Relations, a government affairs and public policy firm located on Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C. She has over 25 years of government relations experience and works with clients to represent their priorities before the Congress, the Executive Branch and regulatory agencies on issue areas such as environment, water, trade, energy, workforce, tax, and appropriations. She also prepares written comments for clients in rulemakings before federal agencies, as well as testimony and other communications with Congress.

Before starting her firm in 2013, she was vice president of government relations at a government relations firm for three years where she provided strategic advice, government relations and issue management services for three manufacturing trade associations.

From 1998 until June 2010, Ms. Salmon served in a variety of positions for the Washington, D.C.-based government affairs firm of Waterman & Associates, including vice president of government affairs. She oversaw the advocacy services for several metalworking-related associations.

Ms. Salmon is a member of the Ripon Society, Women in Government Relations, and serves on a number of National Association of Manufacturers' (NAM) policy committees. Ms. Salmon graduated from the American University, where she studied International Affairs, with a concentration in economics and business. A native of Cincinnati, Ohio, Ms. Salmon resides in Arlington, VA with her husband and three children.
