Heather Cooley is director of research at the Pacific Institute. She conducts and oversees research on issues related to water resilience and sustainability, including water efficiency and reuse, the water-energy nexus, nature-based solutions, and water equity. Prior to joining the Pacific Institute, she worked at Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory studying climate and land use change and carbon cycling. She received a B.S. in Molecular Environmental Biology and a master's degree in energy and resources from the University of California, Berkeley. She has served on several water efficiency related multi-stakeholder groups, including the California Urban Water Conservation Council's Board of Directors, the California Urban Stakeholder Committee, and the California Commercial, Industrial, and Institutional Task Force.
